

ABSTRACT

A tray-constrained mechanism of optical disk drive is proposed. This mechanism, consisting of a resilience part, forms an elastic constraint between the resilience part and a lateral wall on the protrusion part of bottom case, in order to constrain a tray and to 5 reduce vibration generated by a spindle motor. Furthermore, because this mechanism contains only one resilience part, it can reduce both material cost and manufacture cost.